Obama takes giant leap to eliminate state sovereignty

Following up on his January 11, 2010 Executive Order to form a "Council of Governors" as "required by the Fiscal Year 2008 National Defense Authorization Act," (see The I.O. 1-19-10), the 10 governors (one of whom is not even a State governor) selected by Obama include:

James Douglas (R-VT); Chris Gregoire (D-WA); Brad Henry (D-OK); Jay Nixon (D-MO); Martin O'Malley (D-MD); Janice Brewer (R-AZ); Bob McDonnell (R-VA); Michael Rounds (R-SD); Beverly Perdue (D-NC) and Luis G. Fortuno (R-Puerto Rico).

The selection of these governors is interesting. Of the seven states that have passed state sovereignty bills -Alaska, Idaho, Louisiana, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee - two are represented on this list. Oklahoma, a leader in this movement, stated it will "serve as notice and demand to the federal government, as our agent, to cease and desist, effective immediately, mandates that are beyond the scope of [its] constitutionally delegated powers," and passed the law despite the governor's veto. As a result Obama has targeted Oklahoma with the possibility of withholding federal funds.

Another interesting aspect of these selections is that many of these governors are currently very unpopular in their states. Citizens are calling for the impeachment of Washington Governor Gregoire who pushed for "climate change, cap and trade" legislation last March. State Senator Randy Brogdon (R-OK) is running against Governor Henry on a pro-state sovereignty ticket stating "I think it's time we have a governor who believes in right and wrong, not just right and left." Ten Vermonters are running for state office this year on a secessionist basis; Governor Nixon authorized the infamous MIAC report last March; and Arizona is in the completion process of its Hoover Dam Highway and is a gateway state to Mexico, the result of NAFTA. In March 2009 Governor Brewer asked the Pentagon for 250 additional Guard troops because of the negative effect of the illegal drug trade and illegal immigration, but the Pentagon replied that the decision hinged on a larger national border strategy still in development. The National Governors Association is set to convene its 2010 winter meeting in Washington D.C. February 20-22. Governors will meet "at the White House for meetings with the President and members of his Cabinet regarding many of the critical issues topping the legislative agenda during the current Congress," a news release from NGA.org announced February 8.

States' roles in health care reform will be the key topic on the governors' agenda, with Vermont Governor Douglas taking a leading role in pushing Obama healthcare reform. The future of the nation's surface transportation policy and finance system; the state-federal partnership under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act; reshaping public health and preparedness for the 21st century; and advancing a green economy and homeland security will also be discussed.

Governors will be joined by the premiers of Canada for a special session, "Common Border, Common Ground," focused on common challenges, innovative policy solutions and issues related to trade, border security, energy and the environment.

Ron Paul says "take out the CIA!" while NSA goes to bed with Google

A new movement toward strengthening cyber-security is taking place between the NSA and Google since the internet Giant announced last month that the Chinese government illegally hacked into the G-mail accounts of Chinese citizens. This more than likely 9/11 style, false flag cyber-attack has paved the way for the partnership. Do the new bedfellows Google and the NSA make you feel safer?

Ron Paul, in an incredibly bold maneuver during the Campaign for Liberty Regional Conference in Atlanta, GA on the weekend of January 16-17, 2010, elicited a thunderous round of applause as he lambasted the most powerful intelligence agency on the planet, the CIA.

"There's been a coup - have you heard? It's the CIA coup. The CIA runs everything! They run the military... and they're every bit as secretive as the Federal Reserve. And yet, think of the harm they have done since they were established at the end of World War II. They are a government unto themselves. They're in businesses, in drug businesses, they take out dictators... We need to take out the CIA!" Ron Paul told the crowd.

Not so shocking is the burial of Paul's comment in the mainstream media. However, another intelligence agency is receiving mainstream attention with the January 22 USA Today exposé of news icon Paul Harvey's relationship with the FBI. The report was compiled from numerous documents recovered via a freedom of information act request by USA Today and paints a vivid image of how our intelligence agencies act manipulatively to cultivate American viewpoints. According to the article, Harvey would submit his news stories to the FBI for editing and was, at one point, added to J. Edgar Hoover's "Special Correspondents List" for reporting favorably on the FBI. It goes on to say, "[t]he federal files show that Harvey frequently gave the FBI advance copies of his scripts and columns, seeking information and advice. The FBI obliged, even writing portions of Harvey's commentaries for him, the records show. A 1986 commentary, for example, contained an FBI-written section about the bureau's 'highly regarded' services to other law enforcement agencies."

This disturbing revelation in the wake of Harvey's passing illuminates a new perspective on his rise to stardom, his consistent rank in the Gallup Poll's list of Most Admired Men, and his being awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by George W. Bush in 2005.

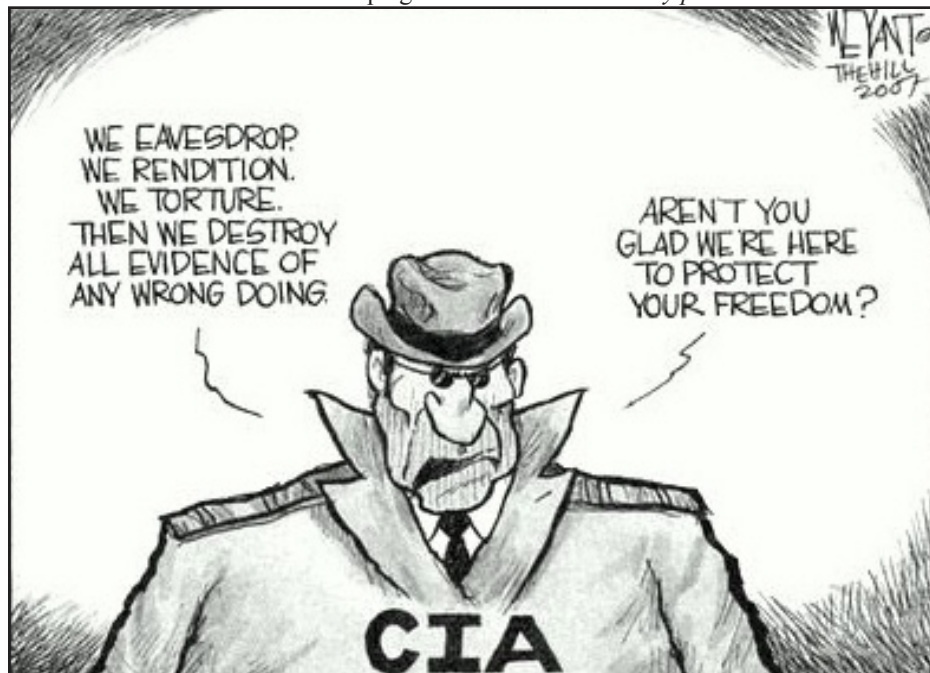

Although the official stance from the U.S. intelligence community is that they "can neither confirm nor deny the use of agents as journalists, however it has been [their] policy not to," the evidence is clear. In August 2009 investigative journalist Wayne Madsen reported that two Blackwater operatives, under direction of the CIA, were embedded as phony journalists in Iraq, Iran, Afghanistan and Pakistan in 2003. Their mission, according to Madsen, was "target analysis and target spotting... for potential US attacks." He also reported that these intelligence operatives had infiltrated Ron Paul's 2008 Presidential campaign as security guards, and when confronted on the issue the agency nonchalantly shrugged it off as commonplace.

The movement of Amerika into a full blown police state where every citizen is monitored and supervised by overzealous security guards is in full swing. Now intelligence agents need only a computer and internet connection to track your every move, and monitor all your thoughts.

In Memory of Legendary Historian Eustace Mullins

Eustace Mullins left his body to meet his Creator on February 2, 2010 just after noon at the home of his caretaker in a small town in Texas, only one month before his 87th birthday - March 9. He was admired worldwide and will be greatly missed.

Mullins suffered a stroke three weeks ago in Columbus, Ohio. He had been on an extended tour of his admirers for much of the past year, visiting and chatting with many of his thousands of fans who jumped at the chance to buy his books from him in person.

The author of such incendiary books as "Secrets of the Federal Reserve," "Murder by Injection," and "The Curse of Canaan," Mullins was harassed by the FBI for almost a half century, and had one of his books burned in Germany in the 1950s. These stories are recounted in his book, "A Writ for Martyrs."

A protege of the imprisoned patriotic poet Ezra Pound, Mullins wrote numerous articles and books detailing the passage down through time of a hereditary group of banksters and killers who have essentially ruled the world from behind the scenes since ancient times.

"Eustace Mullins was the greatest political historian of the 20th century, and not just because he was not beholden to the power structure that deters candid reports about significant events, but because, guided by the greatest poet of the 20th century who was imprisoned for broadcasting for peace, his meticulous research eventually uncovered virtually every political secret of the last 400 years," said internet essayist John Kaminski of Mullins' passing.

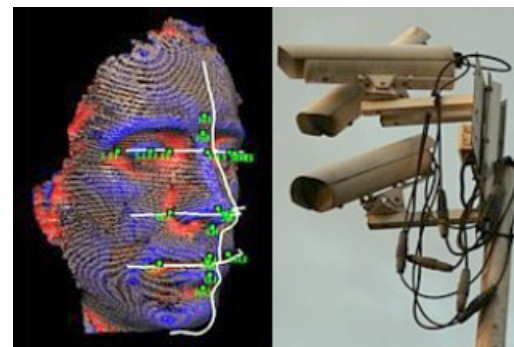

"It's a pity so many people are afraid to believe what Mullins told them, because it was much more of the truth than has ever been seen in our schools or our media," Kaminski added.

Eustace was buried in a spot he picked out last month, in his hometown of Staunton, Virginia.

Israeli mind-scanner may take over US airports

As part of stringent measures to beef up airport security, U.S. authorities may use an Israeli-made mind-reading scanner that allegedly predicts whether a passenger is a potential threat or not.

The Transportation and Safety Administration (TSA) and the Dept. of Homeland Security are considering the installment of a controversial mind-reading system, recently developed by the Israeli-based WeCU Technologies, in all American airports, the AP reported on January 28, 2010. The device, which functions by blending high computer technology and behavioral psychology, is essentially designed to "get inside the evildoers head" without the subject's knowledge and prevent him or her from placing the lives of fellow travelers in jeopardy. According to WeCU Technologies CEO, Ehud Givon, people cannot help reacting mechanically to recognizable images that suddenly appear in unfamiliar places. With that in mind, the system aims to project images onto airport screens, such as symbols affiliated with a terrorist group or signs only a terrorist would recognize. "One by one, you can screen out from the flow of people those with specific malicious intent," Givon claimed. The WeCU system would use humans to do some of the observing but would rely largely on concealed cameras or covert biometric sensors that can distinguish a rise in body temperature and heart rate, however slight it may be. The controversial device has sparked an outcry among civil rights groups, who argue that a system that combs through your brain to look for evil intentions is "Orwellian" and akin to "brain fingerprinting." The groups note that the U.S. should not follow in Israeli footsteps in regard to Airport security. At the Ben-Gurion Airport in Israel, Jewish Israelis pass through smoothly, while Arab Palestinians are taken aside for closer interrogation or even strip searches. The U.S. is already subjected to wide-spread controversy over the appliance of full body scanners, which according to critics, are in violation of child protection laws as well as the right of travelers to privacy.
